COALESCE JUICERY & WHOLE FOODS SEEKS TO NOURISH FROM WITHIN By Rachael Carnes

“Food is my heart and soul,” says Coalesce Juicery & Whole Foods Kitchen’s chef and owner Karina Wolford. “It’s what makes me happy.”

Wolford, who opened her food truck in April, promotes healthy eating as one way to combat serious health issues, including her own bout with multiple sclerosis.

She learned to cook from her dad, a chef in the Navy. “My dad taught me to cook huevos rancheros,” Wolford says. “My mom had a baby when I was in high school, and soon I was cooking for the family every night.”

Wolford pursued her dream of culinary school, attending the prestigious Western Culinary Institute Le Cordon Bleu College of Culinary Arts in Portland. She learned the classics and began working more than 90 hours a week in high-end restaurants, doing what she loved.

Then, in 2008, Wolford experienced a sudden onset of numbness and tingling, first in her toes and fingers. Soon the sensation crept up her limbs. She became distracted, foggy and easily fatigued.

Diagnosed with multiple sclerosis, a disease in which the immune system eats away at the protective covering of the nerves, “I became a liability in the kitchen,” Wolford says. Unable to carry a pot of boiling water or stand all day, the 28 year old was forced to quit working.

“I was on 20 medications, and I was at a point where it was either go down that dark tunnel or change what I was doing,” Wolford says.

Wolford turned to food for healing, adopting a raw- and whole-food diet, and she felt better almost immediately, she says.

“I was getting around more, I was less tired,” she says. “I lost 65 pounds in the first six months, and my clarity and capacity started to come back.”

Wolford’s change in diet, away from the processed foods she was accustomed to and towards healthier, nutritionally dense options, is a journey she likes to share. And with her new food truck, Wolford has the opportunity to introduce customers to tasty, developed flavors.

Coalesce offers breakfast items, like a toasty granola made from sprouted buckwheat and sweetened with dried fruit. Lunch items include a raw “chicken” salad that tastes remarkably like something made from actual chicken meat, with the savory and sweet crunch you’d expect.

Also on the menu is a fresh carrot nori wrap with avocado and organic sriracha sauce. Wolford serves fresh-pressed juices, such as the Green As It Gets which, Wolford points out, in its 16-ounce cup is the nutritional equivalent of eating four large salads.

“We’re 100-percent gluten-free, so we’re safe for people who have celiac disease,” Wolford says. “And we’re 100-percent organic. We’re also 100-percent dairy-and soy-free. We’re uncompromising on that.”

Everything at Coalesce, from plates to forks and straws, is compostable. And it’s clear from the line of smiling customers that Coalesce fills a niche.

Wolford recently had an MRI, and she says her neurologist was amazed to see that there had been no progress in her MS over the past six years.

“I like to share my story and share my recipes,” Wolford says. “I like to come out and talk to people, and show them that you can have more exciting things to eat.” ■

Coalesce Juicery and Whole Foods Kitchen is located in the M.Jacobs parking lot at 8th & Charnelton, and is open 7:30 am to 3:30 pm Monday through Friday and 9 am to 5:30 pm Saturday. Online orders at mkt.com/coalescejuicery.

A League of Their Own

POPULAR FOOD TRUCK GOES BRICK AND MORTAR
IN DOWNTOWN EUGENE By William Kennedy

THE LEROY BURGER

Last year, Food Network star Guy Fieri brought his show Diners, Drive-ins and Dives to Eugene. In the episode, Fieri stopped by popular Whiteaker food truck The Sandwich League.

"I couldn't have asked for a better advertisement," Sandwich League owner Dawn Sellers says. "It's been amazing."

She continues, "Every time it airs we get these bursts of people. Sometimes it airs four or five times a week. We've been able to take the next step because of it."

The next step for The Sandwich League is opening a brick-and-mortar space adjacent to Hi-Fi Music Hall at 44 E. 7th Ave., in downtown Eugene.

"Due to the Food Network exposure, they offered us the kitchen," Sellers says, "hoping that our following at the cart will come over here."

Sellers confirms the cart will remain in operation, referring to it as "her baby." In its new location,

Sandwich League provides the food and drink for Hi-Fi events as well as catering to a lunch and dinner crowd.

"The kitchen size alone let us open up our menu," Sellers explains. "At the cart, we've got a 36-inch grill, a double fryer and that's it. Here, we've got a 4-foot grill. Our cooking equipment has grown, and so some of the things we did at the cart as specials have now made it onto the menu permanently."

Sellers explains that, at the new location, she's adding shareable, smaller plates to Sandwich League's menu. "We're going to add nachos; we're going to add onion rings," she says, "typical bar-style food. Of course, it will have our little twist on it."

One of the twists, Sellers says, is her unique sandwich "builds."

"It's not your everyday club sandwich you'll see at normal restaurants," she says. "We put french fries on all of our sandwich builds." Sellers says that using local meat is a priority at Sandwich League, adding, "I make everything from scratch."

At the Whiteaker location, The Leroy burger (bacon, cheese sauce, barbecue sauce, raw onions, crispy onions and cilantro slaw) is a customer favorite. "It's my personal favorite," Sellers says. "I built that one to satisfy my burger needs."

At the new location, The Big Au Jus is a bestseller. "We make our au jus sauce from bone broth," Sellers says. "The Big Au Jus is actually a new menu item. We ran it as a special at the cart, and it was exceedingly popular. So now it's on the menu here."

Other tasty menu options include slow-roasted pork and "grilled cheesies."

Sandwich League's downtown location is open from 11:30 am to 2 am. "We're really happy to be here, and the community support that helped get us here has been unbelievable," Sellers says. "We're really thankful for it. This is a really neat community." ■

Celestial Vibe

SUNDIAL WILL FEATURE GLUTEN-FREE VEGETARIAN BREAKFASTS AND LUNCH By Amy Schneider

Alex Moon has worked in the restaurant industry for 20 years, but it only recently occurred to her that she could open up her own place. “It’s a relatively new idea for me,” she says.

Moon, who currently works at Belly Taqueria, launched a Kickstarter in February to raise funds to open Sundial Café and Bakery. The gluten-free, vegetarian breakfast and lunch spot doesn’t have a home location yet, but it does have $12,000 of Kickstarter-raised money to back it up. Moon hopes to open sometime between July and October, depending on when she finds a space to set up shop.

Until then, Moon regularly posts food porn of her own making to Sundial’s Facebook page: For National Donut Day, she featured her gluten-free, vegan chocolate chip-banana-strawberry donuts. Other future dishes include blueberry coffecake crumb muffins, Spanish-style baked eggs with goat cheese and cilantro and incredibly sweet, sorbet-like coconut mango balls.

Moon says she grew up in New Mexico and Southern California, and she learned to love food from her grandmother, who was her primary caregiver. “She made breakfast, lunch and dinner seven days a week,” Moon says. “She was always in the kitchen, and I was always interested in what she was doing.”

While working at Morning Glory Café, Moon says, the vegetarian fare inspired her. “Morning Glory Café was probably the most positive environment that I’ve ever worked in,” she says. “There’s just something magical that happens when you feed people really good food and they get excited about what you’re doing.”

Moon says she is an on-and-off vegetarian, and she’s been gluten-free ever since she removed gluten from her diet as part of a cleanse. Six weeks into the cleanse, she says, “I got a dose of gluten by accident, and within 20 minutes I was really, really sick.”

She’s been completely off gluten ever since, she says, and it’s helped diminish her joint pain. Moon says she’s excited to serve healthy food and organic produce at her restaurant.

She’s hoping to land her restaurant somewhere in downtown Eugene, south Eugene or the Whiteaker neighborhood, she says, adding that those locations seem most accommodating to a vegetarian restaurant. She’s looking for a place that can seat 50, ideally with a patio area that can seat 20. “Even though our patio season is short, I want people to come outside in the summer,” she says.

Inside décor might feature air plants in hanging containers, she says, adding that the restaurant will have “somewhat of a celestial vibe.” Her partner thought of the name “sundial,” Moon says, and she thinks it’s appropriate, given her own celestial name.

Sundial Café’s menu will offer a range of breakfast foods, from egg dishes for savory fans to waffles and pancakes for fans of sweet dishes. Other future menu items include biscuits and gravy, Asian-style soups, breakfast cocktails, fresh-squeezed juices and smoothies.

Moon says both Josh Alderson of Morning Glory Café and Brendan Mahaney of Belly have advised and supported her in her endeavor to open her own restaurant, and some close friends of hers have stepped up to help out.

For now, Moon can’t start until she finds a place, but she says she’s excited for that moment to come, and she’s appreciative of all the donors on Kickstarter who helped fund her dream. “I think this town is really ready for a restaurant like this, focused on all gluten-free products,” Moon says. “I was so happy that people came through for me.” ■

The Garden of Beer

EUGENE'S LATEST BEER VENUE
HAS OUTDOOR SEATING AND FOUR LOCAL FOOD CARTS

By Amy Schneider

There's a new beer garden in town, and it's called — well, it's called beergarden.

"We wanted to keep it as simple as possible," says co-owner Patric Campbell, "and it ties in to Gray's Garden Center next door. The period makes it more of a statement."

Located on 6th Avenue along the edge of the Whiteaker neighborhood, beergarden. had its soft opening on June 5, and its 42 taps are primed to pour Northwest beers, wines and non-alcoholic beverages.

Campbell, also the co-owner of The Tap & Growler on 5th Avenue, says the layout of beergarden. is largely an exercise in repurposing — much of its interior came from the now-defunct Marie Callender's restaurant near Valley River Center.

Copper fixtures, wooden tables and chairs as well as a fireplace create a warm, glowing atmosphere while paying homage to a restaurant of times gone by.

But there's more to beergarden. than just the building. The back doors lead to a spacious patio populated with picnic tables and tables made from shipping pallets. Campbell has partnered with Gray's Garden Center to fill the outdoor patio with flowers, shrubs and other greenery.

CARIBEÑA CHICKEN FROM WHAPPING FOOD CART

Don't think it's all about the beer, because this beer garden is not devoid of food — four local food carts and trucks are on site, ready to serve up meals to the taphouse crowd.

The lineup includes Mondo Forcella with its gourmet Italian food, Whapping with Costa Rican and Caribbean cuisine, The Zingaro's tasty fare and the Hawaiian Lani Moku Grill.

"When a concept like this came around, it was very attractive to me," says Fred Badillaobando, owner of Whapping food cart. And, he says, "from hour number one, business has been great."

Customers can hang indoors and enjoy a cold drink, gather at the tables outside, order beer from the sliding glass window and head over to the food carts when hunger strikes. The open layout and casual feel lend an air of festivity.

"That's really where we fell in love with this place," Campbell says in reference to the patio.

Surprisingly, it's hard to hear the noise and bustle of cars on 6th Avenue on the other side of the building. Campbell says he hopes to add to the positive ambience by building a stage for bands to play. ■

Although open, beergarden. does not yet have a grand opening date set. In the meantime, check out beergarden.'s Facebook page or drop by at 777 W. 6th Ave.

MEBRILLO HEAD CHEF COREY WISUN SHARES
HIS TAKE ON CUBAN CUISINE By Rachael Carnes

On a drizzly May morning, Membrillo Latin Cafe offers a warm departure to sunnier climes. Notes of simmering black beans and caramelizing onions fill the air as music wafts from the compact kitchen.

“This is my home,” says chef and co-owner Corey Wisun. “And when others come into my home, this is how I want to treat them.”

Since bursting on the Eugene foodie scene in May 2014, Membrillo has gained an ardent following for its fresh, locally sourced Cuban, Spanish and South American flavors.

Now Membrillo is on the move to 15th & Willamette Street, to a 50-seat restaurant set to open in June. With Wisun in the kitchen and his partner and co-owner Sarah Footit running the front house, jumping into a bigger space feels right, Wisun says. After all, the new restaurant will still focus on the exquisite fixings that Membrillo’s patrons expect.

“I go to the [Lane County] Farmers Market every Saturday to see what’s new, what’s exciting,” Wisun says. “After I get the ingredients, then I try to figure out what to do with them.”

With a menu that can change daily, Wisun serves up fresh, seasonal gems, like an Ensalata Del Dia, made with tender root vegetables and greens; and Calabaza, fried squash blossoms with a goat cheese and chorizo stuffing, served with a nettle-ramp salsa verde.

Although Wisun knows his way around meat, seafood and poultry, vegetarians will also find Membrillo features some of the most inventive meat-free dishes in town.

Wisun says he’s continually inspired by new Latin foods, each bite piquing his curiosity.

“When I try a new Latin dish, I want to know more about it,” Wisun says. With the mind of a chef, Wisun breaks the components of a new dish down and imagines how he could make it unique, “to put my own local spin on it,” he says.

Born in Miami and raised in the suburbs of south Florida, Wisun grew up on a diet of “Cuban food and Jewish deli food,” he says, and his cooking tries to bring that sense of adventure, and comfort, to every plate.

Wisun praises the sweet and savory balance of a traditional mofongo, a fried, plantain-based dish, mashed in a wooden mortar-and-pestle and studded with crunchy pork cracklings or bacon. The signature dish, common in Cuba, offers a perfect harmony of flavors that keeps people coming back for more.

“Guests that come in the door that have a Latin upbringing say that the food evokes a lot of food memories,” Wisun says. “They say it reminds them of their grandma’s house. That keeps me going.”

Wisun admits that he didn’t learn cooking at his grandma’s elbow. In fact, he says his earliest fascination with cooking began as a youngster, watching Julia Child and The Galloping Gourmet on PBS. “That made an imprint,” he says.

He began cooking professionally in 2004, and after training at a culinary school in Florida, Wisun opened his own successful catering company and later was head chef at Falling Sky’s Brewpub and then Pour House (if you’ve eaten your fair share of pastrami at either location, the recipe is Wisun’s).

“Most of my education has come on the job, just cooking,” Wisun says.

Whether it’s the bite-sized arepa, a corn flour and cheese pancake with smoked Tillamook cheddar cheese, or the pork spare ribs, braised and grilled with a sherry glaze, Wisun aims to create food that is complex yet approachable, with “simple, good flavors that work well together,” he says.

“This is tapas style,” Wisun says. “The food’s meant to come out in waves.”

By shining a spotlight on the colors, textures and flavors of Latin culture that don’t include Central America, Wisun says, Membrillo can offer tastes that diners “can’t get anywhere else in town.”

The new restaurant space, at 1530 Willamette Street, will more than double Membrillo’s seating capacity.

“It’ll be a completely different restaurant,” Wisun says. “Inviting, great space, contemporary, fun. There will be a bar with seating and floor space available for a band. We’ll have dancing on Friday and Saturday nights.” ■

For more information about the new opening, follow Membrillo Café on Facebook or call 205-8470.

THE SUSHI STAR BRIGADE
IS HERE TO BRING YOU
LOVE AND NORI WRAPS

By Amy Schneider

DAVID FELDMAN AND AMELIA MAE KANN OF THE
SUSHI STAR BRIGADE SEEK TO FULFILL THEIR MISSION OF LOVE AND SILLINESS

“You are a stardazzle. I love you.” These are the words of initiation into the Sushi Star Brigade.

To understand what the Sushi Star Brigade is, you first have to realize that it is two things at once. Conventionally, it’s a new food booth at the Lane County Farmers Market, serving up vegan nori wraps on Saturdays.

A little less conventionally, it’s the mission post of a galactic collective originating from the “Nori Nova” in the Milky Way galaxy, and its mission is “to teach the people here how to use agriculture sustainably so they don’t destroy the planet,” says sushi chef David Feldman, who also goes by the name Captain Monday. “Really, the main point is that we’re here on a peaceful mission to spread joy,” Feldman explains. “And silliness. And love.”

Feldman, who started making sushi at the University of Iowa 10 years ago, says he opened the sushi booth after traveling the music festival circuit and catering for a few years. Since he sources most of his ingredients from the farmers market, he says, it seemed like a logical place to set up shop.

“Also, I just wanted to get a little more grounded in the community, so I decided to do the market instead of the festival circuit this year, because summer in Eugene is glorious,” he says.

Feldman’s sushi is entirely vegan — teriyaki and mushrooms make up the Forest Roll, while the Rainbow Roll includes every fruit and veggie imaginable, including mango, avocado, cabbage, peppers, cucumbers, squash and beets.

Sushi Star Brigade also offers salads, miso soup and green teas. A bicycle-powered blender for making green-tea banana smoothies is in the works, Feldman says.

“We’ve had a lot of repeat customers already, which is great,” he adds. “I think people like it. More than money, that’s the reason that makes sense to me to keep doing this.”

For now, Feldman is joined by a few of his friends in the booth. They’re hard to miss at the farmers market, because they all dress in costume. The costumes vary, Feldman says. “We usually do themes, but we’re planning on announcing the themes ahead of time so people can get discounts if they come to the market dressed in that theme.” A few past themes include butterflies and moths, flowers and silky matching pajamas.

And when will the Sushi Star Brigade consider its mission complete?

“Our primary goal is to remind all of the humans that ‘You are a stardazzle and I love you.’ And once we have delivered that message to everyone on the planet, we can move on to the next world,” Feldman explains. “The goal for takeoff is 2025, based on our calculations about when Earth people will figure out interstellar travel.”

Until then, keep an eye out for the sushi booth with the colorfully dressed visitors from outer space. ■

Pasta Palooza

PLACIDO'S PASTA SHOP TURNS OUT
HANDMADE, ORGANIC NOODLES By Mike Bivins

For Joe Placido, owner of Placido's Pasta Shop, cooking has always been a part of life.

"Me and my sister, when we were kids, we used to play restaurant at the house," Placido says. With Placido as the cook and his sister as the waitress, they would serve their parents' friends from a menu with a single dish, which was "pretty much spaghetti sauce."

"We are a huge food family," Placido says, who acknowledges having lots of secret family recipes.

These days Placido, who graduated from UO in 2005 with a degree in economics and a minor in business, is serving a bit more than spaghetti sauce, and his Italian restaurant, which opened in January of this year, serves fresh organic pasta with its meals.

"The noodles are the focal point — they are all fresh-made pretty much daily," Placido says, while adding that "everything is in and around noodles."

Alongside classic Italian dishes like chicken alfredo, Placido's offers organic gluten-free penne dishes. Placido's also features a vegan noodle dish called The Walrus, made with eggless rigatoni and topped with organic veggies and marinara, then garnished with parsley.

For those who don't enjoy pasta, Placido's also offers several salads, with the option of adding chicken or seared tofu.

Before opening his own Italian restaurant, Placido worked in a number of Italian joints, and even worked in the corporate side of food out in Boulder, Colorado, but eventually decided it was time to return home to Eugene.

Placido says he really enjoys the human side of cooking for others. "I just really like making food and making people happy with the end result. I like putting my passion into a dish and giving it to a person and then being able to feel the love as they eat it." ■

Placido's is open 11 am to 2 pm and 5 pm to 9 pm Tuesday through Friday, and 5 pm to 9 pm Saturday and Sunday. Reservations accepted. A menu is available on its Facebook page.

She says she's gotten a lot of great feedback so far, and although food is only available for takeout one day of the week, Fikre says she's saving up to someday purchase a food truck. “We really do want to expand, but we just started out,” she says. * Oakridge Lodge & Guest House added a restaurant to its amenities in August of last year. Uptown Bistro reopened in May for the summer season, says co-owner Lynda Kamerrer. "Food is one of those things that is not very abundant in Oakridge in terms of choices for a sophisticated meal," she says. "Locally, people who recognize the scarcity have been used to driving to Eugene to get a good meal, and now they can do that here." Kamerrer says Uptown Bistro offers traditional bistro fare orchestrated by executive chef John Onstenk and chef Lyman Mason, including burgers, steaks, pork chops, salads, wood-fired flatbread, handmade bread and desserts. Check it out at 48175 E. 1st St. in Oakridge or call 782-4000.
